The new Asylum-immigration law, also called Collomb law, was published in « Journal Officiel » (official bulletin giving official announcements) on September 10th 2018. It's a new step backwards for the rights of foreign people in general and exiles in particular.

→ The rights and liberties of asylum seekers have been reduced.
You can:

- Deport some even if they are still appealing against a first refusal
- Force them to live in a region and rather than in another one
- Prevent them from moving freely on the territory
- Force them to apply via a video-conference
- Prevent them from asking a residence permit once ruled out
- Put them under house arrest and expel them more easily once ruled out

→ The rights and liberties of foreign people have been reduced:

- Detain them for 24 hours after a document control instead of 16 hours
- Lock them at home 3 hours a day in case of house arrest
- Forbid them to come back on the French territory incase of deportation
- Detain them in a retention center for 90 days instead of 45
- Prevent them from moving within France with foreign official documents from another country
- Make it more difficult their regularization if they are parents of French children
